For one thing, in the common tongue (which they didn't use at all) 'beast' means 'divine being', whereas 'heaven' refers to 'Heavenly beings'. So 'The beast settled on the mountain' would be a perfectly valid phrase, but 'The gods settled on the mountain' would not make any sense. If you insist on using the ordinary English word 'heaven', well, maybe God really likes fairy tales. Christian writers often find themselves writing about the interaction between the gods and the world in the language they would use to describe the relationship between humans and their pets. Certain gods really value their divine beings' companionship: Artemis and her twin-brother, Apollo, for example. (Apollo and Artemis were the kids' names. That's the real reason for the change from Apollo to Zeus.) When a god or goddess wants to talk to a human directly, he or she can do this using a special gift known as a 'consort'. These consorts—think of them as the flunkies—are often animals or human children with whom the gods spend their free time. The thing about consorts is that they work for the gods. They're there for the god-to-god thing. They don't really do much of anything on their own. They're there to lend a hand when needed, and to participate in the god-to-human thing when that happens. For example, God, The Father, had a consort named Jesus, who stood in for him when he was not in a good mood. On the day he gave His consort the name 'Jesus', the Son of God came into existence. And that's why, after that day, He had to call Himself 'J.C. Or J.C.G. Or whatever it is He's calling Himself these days'. And that's why anyone writing about him would be writing in a language that makes sense to one of his pets. So, for example, if you wanted to describe a meeting between the gods and the world, you'd probably write: When the gods spoke to the world, the dogs (and dogs, and dogs) barked, the birds 1cdb36666d

Evidence from epidemiological studies suggest that a diet rich in fruits and vegetables, especially those of the carotenoid-rich berry family, reduces the risk of cardiovascular diseases, perhaps by enhancing stress-resistance. However, the impact of carotenoid intake on cardiovascular health in the context of stress remains unknown. Here, we showed that the supplement of 4 mm orange carotenoid (beta-carotene, C15) (but not of a yellow carotenoid, zeaxanthin) improved the recovery of cardiac functions from acute psychological stress (RS) in a mouse model of myocardial infarction (MI). Furthermore, we showed that these effects were mediated through both PI3K/Akt1 and p38 MAPK signaling pathways. Thus, enhanced stress-resistance by carotenoid may represent a novel approach for preventing and treating stress-induced cardiac damage.We are looking for experienced journalist to write for us.
